For example, the various semiconductor devices (e.g., gate structures and/or source/drain regions) are typically formed by performing known processes including plasma etching, plasma enhanced chemical vapor deposition (PECVD), plasma-enhanced atomic layer deposition (PEALD), and the like. In such processes, a plasma is typically formed to facilitate chemical vapor deposition (CVD) or etching. For example, during plasma processing, a gas is excited, causing ions and electrons to become mobile. The ions and electrons are attracted to the surface of the substrate, and then combine to form chemical species that deposit on the substrate surface. As another example, the plasma can be used to create reactive species that are then used to deposit materials onto a substrate. A plasma reactor must be clean to avoid contamination of a substrate to be processed, as well as, contamination of other components within the system. Unfortunately, the gases and particles generated during the formation of the plasma are typically undesirable contaminants that can adversely affect the processing of the substrate. Thus, the plasma chamber is periodically cleaned to remove the undesirable contaminants. Unfortunately, such periodic cleaning increases the downtime of the apparatus, which translates into reduced production yields and increased cost. Thus, an improved apparatus and method for cleaning such plasma chambers is needed.LONDON (Reuters) - Respite from the longest U.S. government shutdown in U.S. history is needed to make sure there is not a run on the dollar as investors race to buy safe assets in an economic slowdown, according to four central bankers and officials.
